“ I kept thinking about what memory I would share of "uncle" Jamie. There is one that really stood out in my mind. It's completely embarrassing to me, but just sort of defines the relationship.

I was coming to visit my bestie, Rebecca and as I drove up to the house I got distracted enough that I hit the corner of the open garage. I felt like such an airhead! What was worse is that Jamie was standing RIGHT THERE witnessing the entire thing. I was basically idling the car at the time and he confirmed no damage to the house and laughed at me for being such a ditz (my words... not his...).

In spite of my adolescent silliness, I always felt welcomed and important at his home. He was a good guy and his loss leaves a void that won't soon be filled... if ever.
